Tesse is a French Restaurant located on the Sunset Strip and is an excellent example of the architectural freedom and design creativity offered by masonry. The intriguing design was structurally challenging and quite unique, providing an attractive street-front building for diners and public to come and enjoy.

The combination of colors and the textured 6-inch pink concrete masonry blocks provide variety and artistic character within the field of the masonry walls. Flexibility of masonry installation provides a natural appearance in a way that provides a relaxed atmosphere while eating.

As a public facility, concrete masonry was the logical choice for durability and low maintenance. The modern design integrates well with the restaurant use and also reflects compatibility with the surrounding area.

The exterior masonry pink block with alternating green vertical planters deepens the visual and textural contrast giving the final aesthetic quality and character to the building.
